

April 12, 1973

box and chipping the flues, if there is signs of leaks, then the hydrostatic test will go on. Same as we do it now. The thing you want to remember that say every corn flake factory for cows in the state of Nebraska has got a high pressure boiler in it.

SENATOR KEYES: No they don't, they have a low pressure boiler and anything under 25 pounds and they operate it under a 15 pound head of steam.

(End of Belt #13)

(Begin Belt #14)

All the Kellogs plants in Omaha operate under a 15 pound. See, if they had over a high pressure boiler, they'd have to have a licensed engineer there so they don't have it. They operate it under a low pressure boiler. I'm just telling you, I'm just telling you that to me it's a very poor policy and I carry an engineer's license. It's a very poor policy to permit this to come about but go ahead and do it.

SPEAKER: Senator Barnett.

SENATOR BARNETT: Just a question of Senator Kelly if he would.

SENATOR KELLY: Go ahead, Senator Barnett.

SENATOR BARNETT: What kind of a test did you say you were going to have on it now?

SENATOR KELLY: The one that Mr. Shaw and the boiler, the boiler department, department of Labor uses on all high pressure boilers in the State of Nebraska.

SENATOR BARNETT: Where does it say that in the bill?

SENATOR KELLY: That is the certification.

SENATOR BARNETT: Any kind of a certification--it doesn't spell out what kind you've got. Are you, are you for buying a national code for inspecting boilers?

SENATOR KELLY: Well, the words that would go in there in the amendment would be certification pursuant to the rules as shall be prescribed by the State Boiler Inspector, which would be part of the amendment, Wally.

SENATOR BARNETT: This is on the committee amendment right?

SENATOR KELLY: Yes. The original bill doesn't spell out who's going to make that certification.

SENATOR BARNETT: And it don't say what boiler inspection rules they are going to follow.

SENATOR KELLY: It says they will follow the rules and regulations of their department.

SENATOR BARNETT: Right. All right, okay, go ahead, I'm not going to stop it.

SPEAKER: Any further discussion? If not, I believe, we're in a position the bill--the bill's in a position to be advanced or not advanced. Senator Maresh.

SENATOR MARESH: I move that this bill be advanced to E & R Initial.